

LES

Though charity alone will not make one happy in the other world, yet it shall lessen his punishment. Calamy's Sermon.
Collect into one sum as great a number as you please, this multitude, how great soever, lessens not one jot the power of adding to it, or brings him any nearer the end of the inexhaustible stock of number. Locke.
This thirst after fame betrays him into such indecencies as are a lessening to his reputation, and is looked upon as a weakness in the greatest characters. Addison's Spectator.
Nor are the pleasures which the brutal part of the creation enjoy, subject to be lessened by the uneasiness which arises from fancy. Atterbury's Sermons.
3. To degrade; to deprive of power or dignity.

To lessen thee, against his purpose serves
To manifest the more thy might. Milton's Par. Lost.
St. Paul chose to magnify his office, when ill men conspired to lessen it. Atterbury's Sermons.
To LESSEN. v. n. To grow less; to shrink; to be diminished.

All government may be esteemed to grow strong or weak, as the general opinion in those that govern is seen to lessen or increase. Temple.
The objection lessens very much, and comes to no more than this, there was one witness of no good reputation. Atterbury's Sermons.

LESSER. adj. A barbarous corruption of less, formed by the vulgar from the habit of terminating comparatives in er; afterwards adopted by poets, and then by writers of prose.

What great despite doth fortune to thee bear,
Thus lowly to abate thy beauty bright,
That it should not deface all other lesser light. Fa. Qu.
It is the lesser blot, modestly finds,
Women to change their shapes than men their minds.

The mountains, and higher parts of the earth, grow lesser and lesser from age to age: sometimes the roots of them are weakened by subterraneous fires, and sometimes tumbled by earthquakes into those caverns that are under them.

Can, after the murder of his brother, cries out, Every man that findeth me shall slay me. By the same reason may a man, in the state of nature, punish the lesser breaches of that law. Locke.

Any heat whatsoever promotes the ascent of mineral matter, but more especially of that which is subtle, and is consequently moveable more easily, and with a lesser power.

The larger here, and there the lesser lambs,
The new-fall'n young herd bleating for their dams. Pope.

LESSER. adv. [formed by corruption from less.] Some say he's mad; others, that lesser hate him.

Do call it valiant fury. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
LESSER. n. f. [laissés, French.] The dung of beasts left on the ground.

LESSON. n. f. [leçon, French; lectio, Latin.]

1. Any thing read or repeated to a teacher, in order to improvement.

I but repeat that lesson
Which I have learn'd from thee. Denham's Sophy.

2. Precept; notion inculcated.

This days ensample hath this lesson dear
Deep written in my heart with iron pen,
That bliss may not abide in state of mortal men. Fa. Qu.

Be not jealous over the wife of thy bosom, and teach her not an evil lesson against thyself. Ecclesi. ix. 1.

3. Portions of scripture read in divine service.

Notwithstanding so eminent properties, whereof lessons are happily destitute; yet lessons being free from some inconveniences whereunto sermons are more subject, they may, in this respect, no less take, than in other they must give the hand which betokeneth pre-eminence. Hooker, b. v.

4. Tune pricked for an instrument.

Those good laws were like good lessons set for a flute out of tune; of which lessons little use can be made, till the flute be made fit to be played on. Davies on Ireland.

5. A rating lecture.

She would give her a lesson for walking so late, that should make her keep within doors for one fortnight. Sidney.

To LESSON. v. a. [from the noun.] To teach; to instruct.

Even in kind love, I do conjure thee,
To lessen me. Shakespeare's Two Gentlemen of Verona.

Well hast thou lessen'd us, this shall we do. Shakespeare.
Children should be seasoned betimes, and lessened into a contempt and detestation of this vice. L'Estrange's Fables.

LESSOR. n. f. One who lets any thing to farm, or otherwise, by lease.

Lords of the world have but for life their lease,
And that too, if the lessor please, must cease. Denham.
If he demises the glebe to a layman, the tenant must pay the small tithes to the vicar, and the great tithes to the lessor.

LET

LET. conj. [from the adjective least.] That not.

Forty stripes he may give him, and not exceed; let if he should exceed, then thy brother should seem vile. Deut. xxv.

King Luitprand brought hither the corps, let it might be abused by the barbarous nations. Addison on Italy.

LETTERCOCK. n. f.

Upon the north coast, for want of good harbours they have a device of two sticks filled with corks, and crossed flat-long, out of whose midst there riseth a thread, and at the same hangeth a sail; to this engine, termed a lettercock, they tie one end of their boulder, so as the wind coming from the shore fillet the sail, and the sail carrieth the boulder into the sea, which, after the respite of some hours, is drawn in again by a cord fastened at the nearer end. Carcu on Cornwall.

To LET. v. a. [lætan, Saxon.]

1. To allow; to suffer; to permit.

Nay, nay, quoth he, let be your strife and doubt. Fairfax.
Where there is a certainty and an uncertainty, let the uncertainty go, and hold to that which is certain. Ep. Sanderfon.

On the crowd he cast a furious look,
And wither'd all their strength before he spoke;
Back on your lives, let be, said he, my prey,
And let my vengeance take the destin'd way. Dryden.

Remember me, I speak, Raymond, will you let him?
Shall he remember Leonora. Dryden's Spanish Friar.

We must not let go manifest truths, because we cannot answer all questions about them. Collier.

One who fixes his thoughts intently on one thing, so as to take but little notice of the succession of ideas in his mind, lets slip out of his account a good part of that duration. Locke.

A solution of mercury in aqua fortis being poured upon iron, copper, tin, or lead, dissolves the metal, and lets go the mercury. Newton's Opticks.

2. A sign of the optative mood used before the first and imperative before the third person. Before the first person singular it signifies resolution; fixed purpose, or ardent wish.

Let me die with the Philistines. Judges.
Here is her picture: let me see; I think,
If I had such a tire, this face of mine
Were full as lovely as in this of her's. Shakespeare.

3. Before the first person plural, let implies exhortation.

Rise; let us go. Mark.

4. Before the third person, singular or plural, let implies permission or precept.

Let the soldiers seize him for one of the assassins. Dryden.

5. Before a thing in the passive voice, let implies command.

Let not the objects which ought to be contiguous be separated, and let those which ought to be separated be apparently so to us; but let this be done by a small and pleasing difference. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

6. Let has an infinitive mood after it without the particle to.

But one submissive mood which you let fall,
Will make him in good humour with us all. Dryden.

7. To leave.

They did me too much injury,
That ever said I hearken'd for your death.
If it were so, I might have let alone. Shakespeare.

The publick outrages of a destroying tyranny are but childish appetites, let alone till they are grown ungovernable.

Let me alone to accuse him afterwards. Dryden's Sp. Friar.

This is of no use, and had been better let alone: he is fain to resolve all into present possession. Locke.

Nextor, do not let us alone till you have shortened our necks, and reduced them to their ancient standard. Addison.

This notion might be let alone and despised as a piece of harmless unintelligible enthusiasm. Rogers's Sermons.

8. To more than permit.

There's a letter for you, Sir, if your name be Horatio, as I am let to know it is. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

9. To put to hire; to grant to a tenant.

Solomon had a vineyard at Baal Hamon; he let the vineyard unto keepers. Cant. viii. 11.

Nothing deadens so much the composition of a picture, as figures which appertain not to the subject: we may call them figures to be let. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

She let her second floor to a very genteel youngish man. Taylor, No. 88.

A law was enacted, prohibiting all bishops, and other ecclesiastical corporations, from letting their lands for above the term of twenty years. Swift.

10. To suffer any thing to take a course which requires no impulsive violence.

She let them down by a cord through the window. Job.
Launch out into the deep, and let down your nets for a draught. Luke v. 4.

LET

Let down thy pitcher, I pray thee, that I may drink. Gen. xxiv. 14.

My heart sinks in me while I hear him speak,
And every hacken'd fibre drops its hold;
Like nature letting down the springs of life:
So much the name of father awes me still. Dryden.

From this point of the story, the poet is let down to his traditional poverty. Pope's Essay on Homer.

You must let it down, that is, make it softer by tempering it. Moxon's Mechanical Exercises.

11. To permit to take any state or course.

To permit to take any state or course, he let loose his thoughts wholly to pleasure. Sidney, b. ii.

Let reason teach impossibility in any thing, and the will of man doth let it go. Hooker, b. i.

The beginning of strife is as when one *let*eth out water. Prov. xvii. 14.

As terebration doth meliorate fruit, so doth pricking vines or trees after they be of some growth, and thereby letting forth gum or tears. Bacon's Natural History.

And if I knew which way to do't,
Your honour safe, I'd let you out. Hudibras.

The letting out our love to mutable objects doth but enlarge our hearts, and make them the wider marks for fortune to be wounded. Boyle.

He was let loose among the woods as soon as he was able to ride on horseback, or carry a gun. Addison's Spectator.

12. To LET blood, is elliptical for to let out blood. To free it from confinement; to suffer it to stream out of the vein.

Be rul'd by me;
Let purge this choler without letting blood. Shakespeare.

Hippocrates let great quantities of blood, and opened several veins at a time. Arbutnot on Cains.

13. To LET blood, is used with a dative of the person whose blood is let.

Tell him, Cateby,
His ancient knot of dangerous adversaries
To-morrow are let blood at Pomfret castle. Shakespeare.

As terebration doth meliorate fruit, so doth letting plants bleed, as pricking vines, thereby letting forth tears. Bacon.

14. To LET in. To admit.

Let in your king, whose labour'd spirits,
Sore wearied in this action of swift speed,
Crave harbourage within your city walls. Shakespeare.

Rocfetes presented his army before the gates of the city, in hopes that the citizens would raise some tumult, and let him in. Kneller's History of the Turks.

What boots it at one gate to make defence,
And at another to let in the foe,
Effeminately vanquish'd. Milton's Agonistes.

The more tender our spirits are made by religion, the more easy we are to let in grief, if the cause be innocent.

They but preserve the ashes, thou the flame,
True to his sense, but truer to his fame,
Fording his current, where thou find'st it low, Denham.

Let in thine own to make it rise and flow.

To give a period to my life, and to his fears, you're welcome; here's a throat, a heart, or any other part, ready to let in death, and receive his commands. Denham.

It is the key that lets them into their very heart, and enables them to command all that is there. South's Sermons.

There are pictures of such as have been distinguished by their birth or miracles, with inscriptions, that let you into the name and history of the person represented. Addison.

Most historians have spoken of ill success, and terrible events, as if they had been let into the secrets of providence, and made acquainted with that private conduct by which the world is governed. Addison's Spectator, No. 483.

These are not mysteries for ordinary readers to be let into. Addison's Spectator, N. 221.

As soon as they have hewn down any quantity of the rocks, they let in their springs and reservoirs among their works. Addison on Italy.

As we rode through the town, I was let into the characters of all the inhabitants; one was a dog, another a whelp, and another a cur. Addison's Freeholder.

15. To LET in. To procure admission.

They should speak properly and correctly, whereby they may let their thoughts into other mens minds the more easily. Locke.

16. To LET off. To discharge. Originally used of an arrow dimissed from the gripe, and therefore suffered to fly off the string; now applied to guns.

Charging my pistol only with powder, I first cautioned the emperor not to be afraid, and then let it off in the air. Swift.

17. To LET out. To lease out; to give to hire or farm.

18. To LET. [lætan, Saxon.] To hinder; to obstruct; to oppose.

Their senses are not *let*ted from enjoying their objects: we have the impediments of honour, and the torments of conscience. Sidney.

LET

To glorify him in all things, is to do nothing whereby the name of God may be blasphemed; nothing whereby the salvation of Jew or Grecian, or any in the church of Christ, may be let or hindered. Hooker, b. i.

Leave, ah leave off, whatever wight thou be,
To let a weary wretch from her due rest,
And trouble dying soul's tranquillity. Fairy Queen.

Wherefore do ye let the people from their works; go you unto your burdens. Exod. v. 4.

The mystery of iniquity doth already work; only he who now *let*eth will let, until he be taken out of the way. 2 Thes. i. 7.

I will work, and who will let it. Ija. xliii. 11.

And now no longer *let*ted of his prey,
He leaps up at it with enrag'd desire,
O'erlooks the neighbours with a wide survey,
And nods at every house his threatening fire. Dryden.

19. To LET, when it signifies to permit or leave, has let in the preterite and part. passive; but when it signifies to hinder, it has *let*ted; as, *multa me impedierunt, many things have let*ted me. Introduction to Grammar.

To LET. v. n. To forbear; to withhold himself.

After king Ferdinando had taken upon him the person of a fraternal ally to the king, he would not let to counsel the king. Bacon's Henry VII.

LET. n. f. [from the verb.] Hindrance; obstacle; obstruction; impediment.

The secret lets and difficulties in public proceedings are innumerable and inevitable. Hooker, b. i.

Solyman without let presented his army before the city of Belgrade. Kneller's History of the Turks.

It had been done e'er this, had I been consul;
We had had no stop, no let. Benj. Johnson's Catiline.

Just judge, two lets remove; that free from dread,
I may before thy high tribunal plead. Sandys on Job.

To these internal dispositions to sin add the external opportunities and occasions concurring with them, and removing all lets and rubs out of the way, and making the path of destruction plain before the sinner's face; so that he may run his course freely. South.

LET, the termination of diminutive words, from lyce, Saxon, little, small.

LETHARGICK. adj. [lethargique, Fr. from lethargy.] Sleepy, beyond the natural power of sleep.

Vengeance is as if minutely proclaimed in thunder from heaven, to give men no rest in their sins, till they awake from the lethargick sleep, and arise from its dead, so mortiferous a state. Hammond's Fundamentals.

Let me but try if I can wake his pity
From his lethargick sleep. Denham's Sophy.

A lethargy demands the same cure and diet as an apoplexy from a phlegmatick case, such being the constitution of the lethargick. Arbutnot on Diet.

LETHARGICKNESS. n. f. [from lethargick.] Sleepiness; drowsiness.

A grain of glory mixt with humbleness,
Cures both a fever, and lethargy. Herbert.

LETHARGY. n. f. [λεθargia; lethargie, Fr.] A morbid drowsiness; a sleep from which one cannot be kept awake.

The lethargy must have his quiet course;
If not, he swarms at mouth, and by and by Breaks out to savage madness. Shakespeare's Othello.

Though his eye is open, as the morning's,
Towards lusts and pleasures; yet so fast a lethargy
Has seiz'd his powers towards publick cares and dangers,
He sleeps like death. Denham's Sophy.

Europe lay then under a deep lethargy; and was no otherwife to be rescued from it, but by one that would cry mightily. Atterbury.

A lethargy is a lighter sort of apoplexy, and demands the same cure and diet. Arbutnot on Diet.

LETHARGIED. adj. [from the noun.] Laid asleep; entranced.

His motion weakens, or his discernings
Are lethargied. Shakespeare's King Lear.

LETHE. n. f. [λήθη.] Oblivion; a draught of oblivion.

The conquering wine hath steeped our sense
In soft and delicate lethe. Shakespeare's Ant. and Cleopatra.

Her wat'ry labyrinth, which who so drinks
Forgets both joy and grief. Milton.

LETTER. n. f. [from litter.]

1. One who lets or permits.

2. One who hinders.

3. One who gives vent to any thing; as a blood letter.

LETTER. n. f. [litter, French; littera, Latin.]

1. One of the elements of syllables.

A superscription was written over him in letters of Greek, Latin, and Hebrew. Luke xxiii. 38.

Thou wherefore Zed! thou unnecessary letter! Shakespeare.